

Broker Who Took Strychnine Is Made Hospital Prisoner

Morris Radus Is Accused by Breitung & Co. of Failing to Account for $50,000 Worth of Notes

Morris R. Radus, a broker with offices at 96 Warren Street and living with his wife at 58 East 117th Street, is a prisoner in Broad Street Hospital. It was learned yesterday. As soon as he recovers it is understood that he will be arraigned on a charge of grand larceny.

Radus was arrested last Wednesday by Detectives August Mayer and Grover Brown, who found him suffering from strychnine poisoning. He told the detectives, it is said, that he was accustomed to taking the drug, but that he had swallowed a overdose. The detectives had gone to his office to arrest him on the complaint of Breitung & Co., brokers, of 120 Broadway, who allege that on September 28 they gave Radus $50,000 in notes, which he was to discount at various banks for them. Instead of doing so, Breitung & Co. allege that he appropriated a note for $5,000, which, on its return through the bank, showed that it had been turned over to the Kings Post Realty Company, of 464 East Twenty-fourth Street.

Investigation by the detectives is said to have shown that Radus bought two houses from the realty company, for which he gave in part payment $1,000 in cash and the $5,000 note. Radus is said to have admitted that he had some of the notes in his home and that he would take them there as soon as he was well enough.

Second Victim of Fire Dies

James Tennan, of 210 West Sixty-first Street, a negro, who was burned in the fire Wednesday in the basement of the King Tire Company, 1981 Broadway, died yesterday in Bellevue Hospital. Eugene McGuire, of 212 West Sixty-first Street, the other victim of the fire, died in Bellevue Wednesday night.

Who Should Pay for Education?

A WELL-TO-DO Alumnus of one of our Eastern universities, who recently declined to contribute to the Endowment Fund of his Alma Mater, expressed his reasons substantially as follows:

"Why should I pay for educating the children of other people? I am willing to pay for my own. If the college tuition fees are not high enough to cover the cost they should be raised, and I will gladly pay the extra expense. Every one who can afford to should be asked to do the same. Deserving students who cannot afford the entire cost can be taken care of by scholarships."

The attitude of this man is fortunately not that of the great majority of college graduates, but the solution he proposes for the financial problem of the universities is receiving more or less discussion just now.

Those who hold the view that parents should bear the entire responsibility of educating future generations probably do not realize that it is merely a reversion to an ancient view. Not so many years ago education in general—even that of the primary and secondary schools—was paid for by the parents. The condition changed only when the fact became recognized that lack of education handicapped not merely the individual but the whole community. The responsibility for education was therefore brought home to the community.

In democratic America we have managed to avoid the evil of separating students into a paying group and a charity group. Scholarships have been provided, but not of a kind to destroy the self-respect of those whom they partially maintain. In most instances they have been accompanied by an obligation, expressed or implied, upon the individual beneficiary to repay the tuition loan, either in present service or in cash payment after the student has graduated and entered active life.

Personally, I should never consent to any division of New York University students into classes based upon the wealth of their parents. I should regard it as dangerously subversive of the democratic character our student body has always manifested.

Furthermore, I do not believe the community can escape a moral responsibility for securing the financial stability, the proper equipment, and the generous enlargement of the institutions in which the new generation of men is to find its educational opportunity.
